A roar of sound rips through the air, and the building heaves. Another detonation! You stagger, barely catching yourself against the wall. Plaster and rubble rain down; the wall in front of you collapses, choking the hallway in debris. A pipe in the ceiling is split, spewing yellowish gas that stings your eyes and makes you cough. It must be one of the pipes that carries the atmosphere for the Jovians' habitation areas. Kesh lets out an oath. You turn, seeing her drop to one knee.

Martians breathe through their skin, you realize—and she has no way of keeping the gas from seeping into her system. The way forward is blocked. The floor of the hallway leading to the left looks unstable, but you may be able to traverse it. To the right, debris continues to fall from the ceiling, creating a treacherous path.

- Extend my shield to create a barrier around us to block the gas while we make a careful retreat.
- Find a way to shut off the flow of gas.
- Grab Kesh and dash down the unstable hallway to the left before the floor gives way.
